Not illustrated. 1830 Excerpt: . . . pavosky, or the fourwheeled post car without springs, the three horses driven by a rough isvostchick in his red checked shirt, who whooped and hallood to us loudly to keep out of the way; and it was not long before the sharp ring of the bell suspended to the bow on the collar of the centre horse died away in the distance. At the trackteers and post-houses the servants and unemployed isvostchicks might be seen lying about at night on the steps of the door and in the passages, in their sheep-skin shoobs: a pig would occasionally occupy a birth near them; and a hen come and perch on their nose. Never did I see people so indifferent to wherethey slept at night as the Russian moozik (peasants); but the higher orders, too, care little about beds, and, when they arrive at an inn at night, throw themselves on a couch, and have clothes thrown over them by their servants. What a contrast this is to the absurd pitch that luxury has got to among the generality of London servants, who now-a-days are not content with their place, unless each has hisfeather bed! At a village we saw a numerous band of tsegans, or gipsies; and I gave them money to dance and sing, while the whole village collected round us. The male tsegans were, as usual, dark, with very marked features, and wore conical high-crowned hats; otherwise they were dressed in Russian shirts, trousers,...
