Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: . is not surprising that this work of the Regulators provoked the authorities and caused the royal Governor, Tryon, to gather a small army of 1,000 men and march against them with a battery of artillery. But the Regulators, now about 2,000 strong, gave battle on the banks of the Alamance, May 16, 1771. This was the first battle for independence on American soil. For lack of ammunition the Regulators were overcome, leaving 20 dead on the field, and the Governor with his victorious force marched through the colony, confiscating property, burning houses, and administering forced oaths of loyalty to the people. Defeat then was the greatest victory; for success on the part of the Regulators would have precipitated war before they were ready, and before the other colonies were ripe for revolution. But the fact is well attested that this was the first battle, the first libation of blood offered on the altar of American independence. As a reward for this success, Gov. Tryon was promoted to the governorship of New York and Gov. Martin was sent to North Carolina. The second Provincial Congress for North Carolina assembled in New Berne April 3,1775, at the same time and place with the Provincial Legislature. Gov. Martin, by proclamation, tried to prevent the assembling of this Congress. But that body met and issued a counter proclamation, in which they calmly reviewed the situation and affirmed their inalienable rights. But, on the 8th of April, the Assembly was...
